1. A radio station and an air force barracks were south of Khimki (37°26'E/55°53'N), northeast of Novogorsk, Moscow Oblast (see Annex 1).
2. The radio station was comprised of :
 - a. Four two-story stone buildings; one of them, apparently a guard-house, was at the entrance gate of the installation on the Novogorsk-Khimki road. The soldiers seen there wore Soviet Army uniforms with red epaulets. About 15 plywood tents have been south of the buildings since the summer of 1949.
 - b. About 50 steel masts, 15 to 20 meters high, about 50 meters apart, were set up in three different groups. The individual masts were interconnected with three to six antenna wires (see Annex 2).
3. A large four-or five-story barracks building was in a sparse woods southeast of the radio installation. The soldiers who left the building wore air force uniforms with epaulets which seemed to be blue.
